President's Welcome

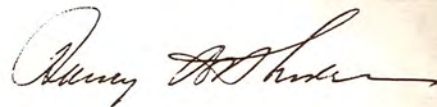

On behalf of the students and faculty of Columbia, it is a great pleasure for me to welcome each of our guests who will visit our campus today to participate in this dedication ceremony.

This college has been constructed to serve the needs of the total community. Those natural and human resources adjacent to and beyond the campus shall be included as an integral part of our instructional program. Our responsibility will transgress artificial boundaries of town, county, or region by providing a meaningful and realistic expression of the occupational, intellectual, sociological, and cultural needs of the community. We are proud to be a Community College.

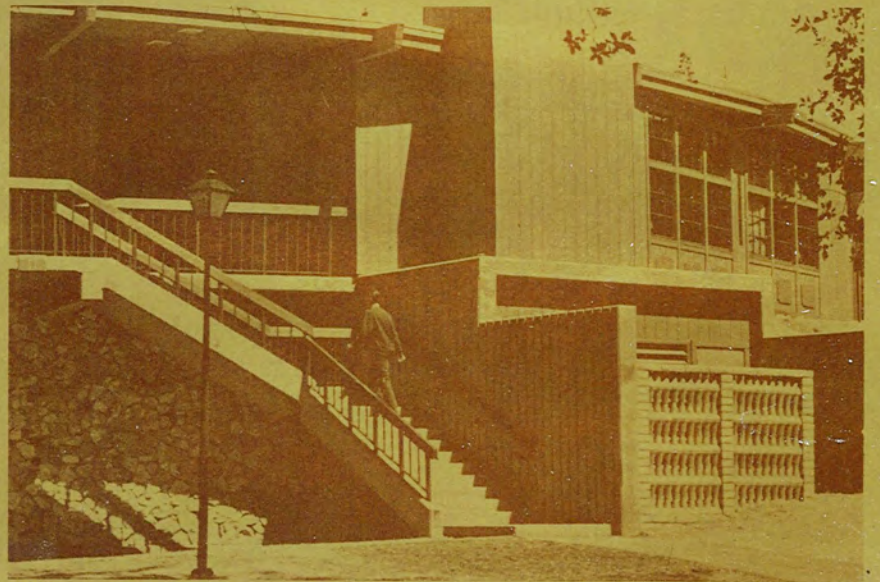

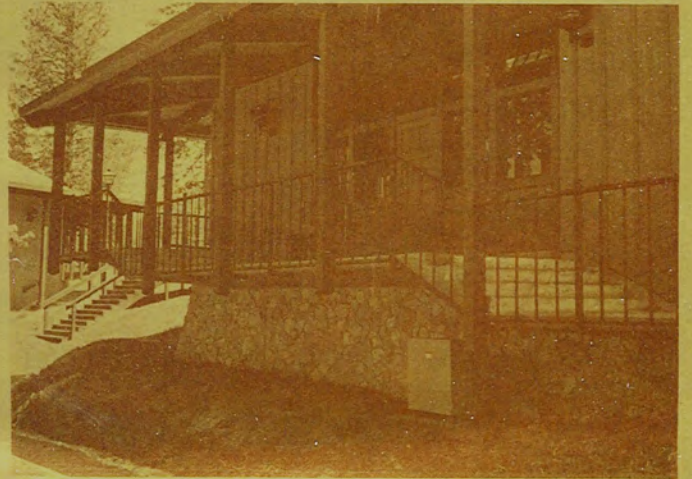

We are dedicated to the worth and dignity of each student and will continue to be subservient to his goals, needs, desires and aspirations. Our program involves students in opportunities which will make education a living experience in a realistic setting. This education will not happen to him, but with him and by him.

We hope that as you enjoy your visit today you will consider returning to take advantage of the program and services provided for you by Columbia. This college exists to serve the educational and vocational needs of the citizens of our district. We hope that you, too, become totally involved.

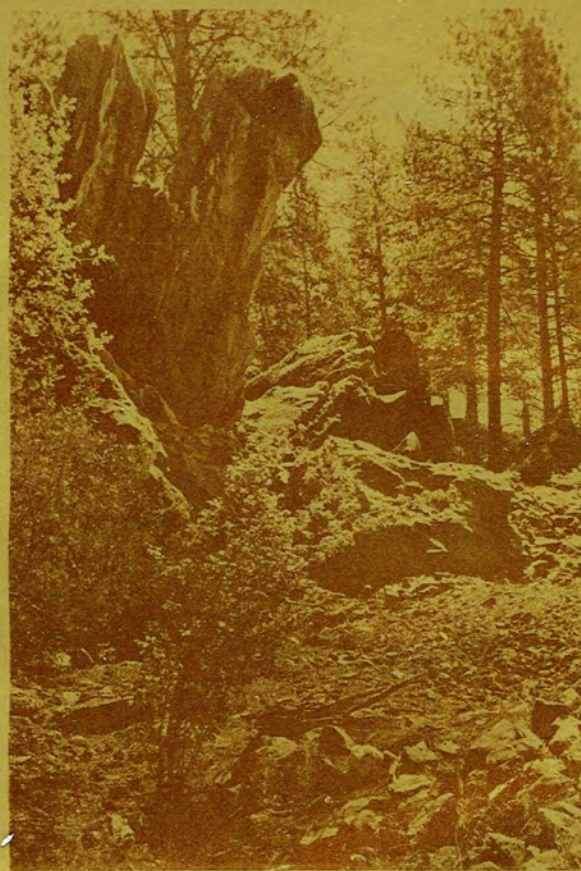

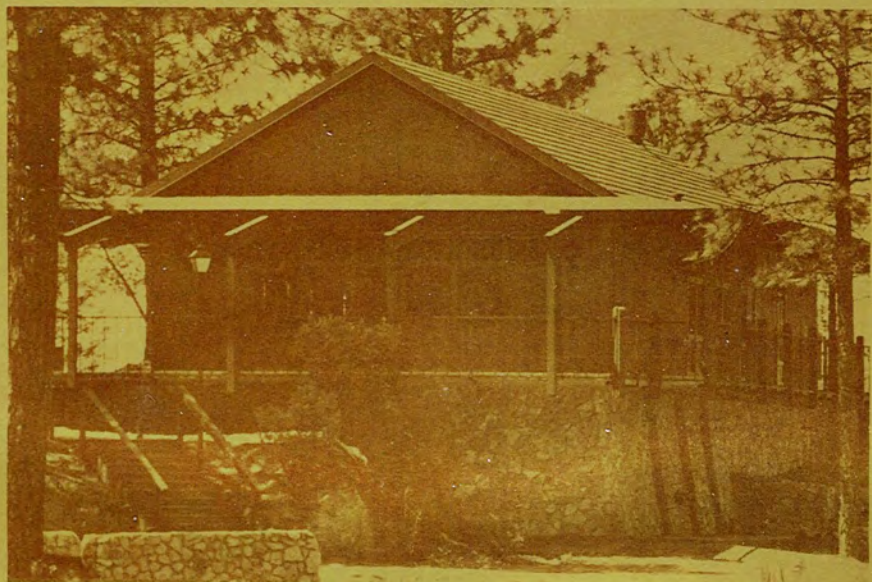

Warmest personal regards,

DR. HARVEY B. RHODES
President
